The answers you need

Energy Drinks in the U.S. through 2028 provides in-depth data and analysis, shedding light on various aspects of the market through reliable data and discussions of what the numbers really mean. Questions answered in this in-depth research study include:

- What amount of energy drinks does the typical U.S. consumer drink in a year, and how has that changed?
- What are the latest developments in the packaging mix for energy drinks?
- Which regions have the strongest markets?
- Is "diet" a priority for consumers? What percentage of volume is full- versus low-calorie?
- How have brand rankings changed recently?
- How have smaller players revitalized the segment lately and what are they doing to differentiate themselves?
- What are the growth prospects for the energy drink category?
- What is happening in the energy shot and healthy energy (including organic) sub-segments?
- What slice of the U.S. market share will slim cans command by 2028? How will that compare with the share held by 16-ounce (and larger)?
- How can I contact the leading energy drink and energy shot companies and succinctly ascertain what products they market in this segment?

10. DIRECTORY OF ENERGY DRINK COMPANIES

Energy Drink Companies ---------- 176

Since the Red Bull brand broke upon the U.S. scene in 1997, the energy drink category has been a fast-growth, high-margin phenomenon, not even derailed by the financial crisis and accompanying recession.

- After its U.S. launch in 1997, Austrian pioneer Red Bull and its trademark eight-ounce slim can quickly drew a torrent of rivals numbering in the hundreds, most of them mustering caffeine-laden formulas melding hitherto unknown ingredients like the amino acid taurine — not to mention an edgy, macho positioning intended to strike a chord with the key target demographic: young males who hang around convenience stores.
- After struggling with an eight-ounce imitation of Red Bull under the granola-connoting Hansen's brand, Hansen Natural Corporation launched Monster Energy as a value play offering twice the volume at a similar $1.99 price. Monster rode its distinctive claw motif as well as savvy bets on up-and-coming alternative sports icons into a strong number two position, steadily narrowing the gap against Red Bull to the point where today they are about even, although Red Bull enjoys more premium pricing particularly as it has shifted toward 12-ounce cans as a key part of its sales mix.
- Reverberations in the segment were felt from Coca-Cola's move in August 2014 to make a minority investment of 16% in Monster Beverage Corporation, which it had distributed in about half of the U.S. and in some overseas markets. The sweeping deal, for $2.15 billion, called for Monster to move almost entirely into the Coke network in North America and to ride its partner into new overseas markets including China. Interestingly, in early 2020, Coke defied its partner by introducing Coca-Cola Energy in the U.S. after already launching it in Europe. However, Coke Energy ended up flopping in the U.S.
- Although the deal between Coke/Monster was the most striking development in energy in recent years, there has been plenty more activity. Red Bull North America has continued its long-term move to self-distribute the brand in major metropolitan areas, terminating other independent houses, particularly so-called "multi-brand" wholesalers who must answer to other masters than just Red Bull.
- Rockstar Energy, after steadily losing ground to Red Bull and Monster quarter after quarter, went on a growth tear a few years ago that, for a change, was not driven by deep discounting, but it has since faltered again — although the far worse performance of its distribution partner PepsiCo's other energy plays, Amp and Mountain Dew Kickstart, seemed to ensure that it retained a place in the network. Indeed, PepsiCo acquired Rockstar.
- After an inevitable slowdown, the energy drink market received a shot of adrenaline with the emergence of so-called performance energy drinks. As noted below, covid-19 put a temporary wrench into the market in 2020. However, the market recovered nicely in 2021. Volume grew weakly in 2022 but has returned to solid mid-single-digit range in 2023.
