

NEW AGE BEVERAGES IN THE U.S. THROUGH 2029

2025 EDITION (To be published September 2025. Data through 2024, preliminary 2025 figures and forecasts through 2029.) More than 325 pages, with extensive text analysis, graphs, charts and more than 45 tables.

Indirect competition. Competition isn't just between similar products within a category anymore. If you aren't keeping an eye on the products that share the shelf with, and are vying for, your product's consumer base and market share, you're missing a key part of the picture. This new age beverage market report offers insight on a broad array of established and emerging non-alcohol drinks that share similar attributes and consumer perceptions of those attributes (whether actual or perceived); meet similar need states; and often compete for scarce shelf space, invaluable consumer loyalty and key consumption moments. This comprehensive report also offers key data and forecasts to help you conduct cross category analysis and spot opportunities. Further, it discusses consumer drivers and innovations that are changing the face of the market. Historical, current and projected data on volume and sales are provided and leading companies and their strategies are analyzed. This study examines diverse beverage categories and their sub-categories that fall under the broad and ever-evolving New Age beverage umbrella including: coconut water, high-end CSDs, energy drinks, kombucha, plant water, probiotics, protein drinks, ready-to-drink tea and coffee, single serve dairy, single serve fruit beverages, single-serve water, sports beverages, single-serve sparkling water, vegetable/fruit juice blends and others. The astute marketer will want to keep an eye not only on their own immediate segment but on the broader competitive set for lessons, risks and opportunities.

It should be noted that from a growth perspective, flavored water has emerged as the weak partner in the value-added water market.

- Coca-Cola and Pepsi-Cola had harbored hopes that flavored waters might pose an escape from the low-margin ghetto that the heavily promotional conventional bottled water segment had become (thanks in large part to their own aggressive battling on price), but that did not prove to be the case.
- While flavored water brands under Dasani (Coke) and Aquafina (PepsiCo) succeeded in expanding the category somewhat, at least initially, they failed to capture much of a price premium, providing a further incentive for the companies to focus on the enhanced segment instead, where the promise of nutritional enhancements proved a more compelling reason for consumers to pay a premium.
- For a while flavored water was able to turn its habitual volume and dollar losses into growth again. However, as the segment declines again, Splash Blast (formerly, Nestlé Splash) and Capri Sun Roarin' Waters became the only major brands to have any meaningful sales — leading Coke and Pepsi to throw in the towel recently.

So-called essence water is unsweetened or mildly sweetened water with light flavor essences. The fledgling category has been populated with brands such as Hint and O Water.

- For consumers wary of ingesting sugar but uncomfortable with alternative sweeteners — including supposedly “natural” ones like sucralose and perhaps even the truly natural (without the quote marks) stevia — unsweetened flavored beverages would seem to be the ideal solution: no carbs, no calories, no artificial sweeteners, but something for the palate in flavor and/or carbonation.
- Early attempts to provide consumers with essence waters were not successful. In the early 2000s, Aqua Vie Hydrators, a line of unsweetened, still flavored water, was ahead of its time. Consumers then were still inured to sweet, flavored, carbonated sodas and were not ready for non-carbonated, unsweetened water.
- As implied, there has been no lack of entrants over the years, but none had broken out — until lately. After a decade-long gestation period, Hint Water started to ignite, as consumers continued to seek alternatives to traditional diet sodas. Brands like the sweetened Sparkling ICE have captured some of these consumers, but so have the unsweetened flavored brands.
- However, it is also true that the category relies on the performance of Hint Water, which has started to slow from its heady growth years.
